Adapting

Ancient people hunted throughout Grand Canyon. They have entered and left the same trailheads in the past and perhaps traditional forays. Shifts in climate caused the extinction of some animals and prey important to their material culture—but these and other changes

Totemic split-twig figures tucked away in dry caves. Structures, images carved into rock, and objects in the upper reaches of the canyon sheltered people for millennia. The scale of the place and time—600 generations—separate the early people from us.
